

Acknowledgments

I am grateful to a wonderful array of people for their contributions and support over the course of the researching and writing of this book. First and foremost, I want to thank the refugees who are featured in this study and are the most remarkable group of young men that I have ever met. A large number of other refugees also provided me with essential information and endless hospitality. I wish I could name them all, but will continue to respect their wishes for anonymity. My deepest gratitude goes to the pastor, referred to in this book as Albert, who helped me enter the clandestine Burundi refugee world in Dar es Salaam. Though my presence in the refugees' lives undoubtedly complicated their lives, I was nonetheless consistently received with kindness and patience, even when the reasons for some of my fieldwork activities seemed unusual or tiresome, or both. They did not have to allow me into their lives. I am truly grateful that they did.

I am indebted to many others as well. Early in the fieldwork period, Allan Hoben, my primary dissertation advisor, visited me and my family in Dar es Salaam. He urged me to follow my intuition and feature the lives of the young Burundi refugee men. His support, guidance, and friendship proved instrumental in the development of this book. Special thanks are also due to my other dissertation advisor, Jane Guyer, for her creative intellect, inspiring insights, and kindness. Among those at Boston University whose assistance remains deeply appreciated are: Eduard Bustin, Maddie Goodwin, Robert Hefner, Joanne Hart, Meredith Kirkpatrick, Sutti Ortiz, James Pritchett, and Gretchen Walsh and all of her helpful and friendly colleagues in Boston University's African Studies Library (David Westley, Loumona Petroff, Richard Alessio, and Augustus Kwaa). Special thanks are reserved for James McCann, the Director of the African Studies Center and Thomas Barfield, Chair of the Anthropology Department, who urged me to re-visit my data and write this book.

A number of people in Dar es Salaam were instrumental in helping me carry out my research. Sincere thanks are offered to a number of people at the University of Dar es Salaam, especially Abel Ishumi, Dr. Kaijage, Prof. Mkude, P. Mlama, and C.K. Omari. Most especially, thanks to Maurice Mbagu, my local contact and friend, and Francis Sichona, without whose insistent support I may have never received permission to research refugee lives in Dar es Salaam. Thanks also to Dr. Sichona's wife, Kisa, officials at the Tanzania Commission for Science and Technology, H.N. Nguli in particular, the Refugee Section of the Ministry of Home Affairs, especially Caroline Mutahanamilwa, the late Daniel Mwaisela and Mr. Songoro, officials at the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Dar es Salaam, including Bruno Geddo, Brian Treacy, Ms. Warioba, William Young, Mr. Rugero of the Christian Council of Tanzania (CCT), and Sister Jean Pruitt of the Tanzania-Mozambique Friendship Association (TAMOFA).

Thanks to Patricia Daley and Liisa Malkki for their pre-fieldwork advice and for steering me to the Tanganyika Christian Refugee Service (TCRS), whose assistance and support in Dar es Salaam was both steady and remarkable, most especially Allan Armstrong and his wife, Marian, the late Jan Bayer and his wife, Pernilla, Jim Hart and his wife, Eila, the late Mzee Mwakambodya, and Edwin Ramathal and his wife, Dorothy. My deepest appreciation is reserved, however, for Bernhard Staub and his wife, Christa, whose support was unstinting and whose friendship is treasured. I am also grateful for the friendship of others in Dar es Salaam, especially Ahmed Bille, Jerry Brenning of USIS, Bo and Britt Birstrom, Maria Finnegan, Nick Howard, Greg MacIsaac, Frank Mbagu, Tessa Willy, and the Tetlows (Anna, Bevis, Chloe, Julian, and Sue). I owe very special thanks to Christine Heller, my family's contact in the United States, for her unfailing support, reliability, and friendship during our stay in Tanzania's capital.

Grateful acknowledgment is due to the foundations who have supported various phases of this work. The Rotary Foundation was the chief supporter of my fieldwork. Special thanks to members of the Rotary Club of Dar es Salaam North, particularly Shyam Jadeja, Santosh Masson, Evarist Mbuya, and especially Dhiru Pabari and Kaleem Shabbir, and to Daniel India for introducing me to the Rotary Foundation. Thanks also to the Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation, particularly Karen Colvard, and to Sigma Xi and the Ford Foundation's Research Enhancement Grant (administered by Boston University's African Studies Center) for their generous support.

During the final stages of write-up, I am grateful for the insights, advice, and input of many friends and colleagues, including Judy Benjamin, Art Hansen, Jim Igoe, Ogbu Kalu, Hugo Kanya, Carolyn Makinson, Susan Pollak, Joost van Puijtenbroek, Neal Rantoul, Peter Rosenblum, Ranga Settlur, Simon Turner, Tony Waters, and, most especially, Warren Weinstein, whose wisdom about Central Africa and gentle support of my work are both deeply appreciated.

Final thanks are reserved for Christine, my wife, stalwart partner, and tender friend, and my son, Isaiah.
