

Notes on Contributors

Joseph C. Berendzen is a doctoral student in philosophy at Villanova University. He is currently writing a dissertation on French existential philosophy and critical theory, and their applicability to the theory of deliberative democracy.

Beata Stawarska is a scientific collaborator at the Husserl Archives, University of Louvain, Belgium, working on a post-doc. project on Merleau-Ponty and experimental psychology.

Justin Skirry is currently a Ph.D candidate at Purdue University with an expected graduation date of June 2002.

Isabelle Grell-Feldbruegge completed her doctoral thesis on Les Chemins de la liberté in 2001. She teaches German at the Université de Caen. She recently published an article on the same trilogy in Simone de Beauvoir Studies.

Anne-Marie Picard is associate professor of French at The University of Western Ontario. She is also affiliated with the hospital St. Anne in Paris where she does clinical research on the pathologies of reading in children. She has written extensively on twentieth century French literature.