

Notes on Contributors

Kenneth L. Anderson is Associate Professor at Oxford College.

Elizabeth Bowman is an independent scholar whose work with Sartre has focused on his unpublished ethics of the mid 1960s. She is currently finishing a book on that topic with Robert Stone. She is also the editor of the Grassroots Economic Organizing Newsletter and has written on worker cooperatives and self-management.

Ronald Aronson is Professor of Humanities at Wayne State University.

Ronald E. Santoni is Maria Theresa Barney Professor of Philosophy at Denison University. His most recent book is Sartre on Violence: Curiously Ambivalent (Penn State Press).

Robert Stone is Professor Emeritus, Long Island Univ., C.W. Post Center, Brookville, NY.

David Drake is Principal Lecturer in French at Middlesex University. He is the author of Intellectuals and Politics in Post-War France and is currently completing a book on French intellectuals and politics from the Dreyfus Affair to the Occupation, to be published by Palgrave.

Bruce Baugh is Associate Professor of Philosophy at the University College of the Cariboo, Kamloops, Canada. His latest book is French Hegel (Routledge).

Kathryn T. Gines is a Post-Doctoral Fellow affiliated with the University of Memphis where she is writing on a book on Arendt, Sartre, and Fanon. Her research interests include Continental Philosophy, African American Philosophy, Race Theory, and Feminist Theory.

Contributors

Matthew C. Ally is Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Borough of Manhattan Community College of the City University of New York, and Lecturer in Philosophy of Religion at Union Theological Seminary. He is currently completing a book on Sartre's unpublished ethical writings of the mid-1960s.